NEW PRINCIPAL'S HOME FOR GOULD ACADEMY

On Monday of the present week, ground was broken on the Gould Academy campus for a new Principal's Home. This building will be another expression of the unbounded generosity of William Bingham, already Gould's greatest benefactor.

This "Home," which will be one of the best of its kind in New England, will be of tapestry brick exterior, to match the Marian True Gehring Students' Home, built a few years ago.

It will be complete and up-to-date in every particular, a credit to the institution and an ornament to the Village.

The plans were drawn by Coolidge & Carlson of Boston, the well known architects, and the construction will be under their supervision. H. Alton Bacon of Bryant Pond is the contractor.

That the Principal's Home properly belongs on the campus, where he can be in closest touch with the student life and campus activities, no one will gainsay, and this new acquisition will bring to realization another dream of the present Principal and his loyal co-workers for the further upbuilding of Gould Academy.

GOULD TRIMS RUMFORD 11-7

The undefeated Rumford team, composed of South Paris, came to Bethel last Saturday and received quite some surprise. The Academy team smashed out one home run, three triples, and five doubles to win a hot contest from the visitors.

Chester was hit hard but tightened in the pinches. Two double plays helped him out of hot holes while two dropped flies in left field started rallies for Rumford.

Hitting stars of the game were Jim Alger with a home run, a triple, and a double in four times up, and Mark Hamlin with a triple, and two doubles in four times up. Al Chester also hit a triple.

For Rumford Stewart, Doolittle, Bryant, and Pugh started with two hits apiece. Irish started in the box for the visitors but was removed in the fourth inning.

The Family Tree

By EDITH ESTABROOKS

MISS MARTHA LORD had put her foot down about young Mattie and Tom Gannett.

A knock interrupted her thoughts and a young man came in, waving an envelope.

"It's come; haven't opened it yet. Let's call Mattie and give her a thrill, too. She looks mighty peaked lately."

"Sonsense! Mattie's all right. What's come?"

"Her nephew, Billy, laughed. 'You know darned well what I mean; the answer from the front paper about Arnold Ross and Matthew Lord, H. Mattie!'

The girl came in hastily and Billy began briskly.

"Mattie, last week when I was reading about Mattie's old clock, a letter dated Bethel, Maine, August 10, 1924, dropped out of one of the columns. Just imagine that! Here's what it said: Matthew Lord is not dead and I am haunted by the thought of him."

"A knock interrupted her thoughts and a young man came in, waving an envelope."

"It's come; haven't opened it yet. Let's call Mattie and give her a thrill, too. She looks mighty peaked lately."

"Sonsense! Mattie's all right. What's come?"

"Her nephew, Billy, laughed. 'You know darned well what I mean; the answer from the front paper about Arnold Ross and Matthew Lord, H. Mattie!'

The girl came in hastily and Billy began briskly.

HIGHER SALARIES FOR CLERGY

By DR. C. G. CAMPBELL, President Eugenic Research Association.

CLERGYMEN have superior children and any proposal to increase the size of their families is promising eugenics. There must be a gradual deterioration in the general quality of racial stock unless remedies are adopted. It would be wise to increase clergymen's salaries for the proper rearing of such progeny. This contains the greatest promise of sustaining and increasing our most valuable racial stock.

With the continuance of present conditions of family limitation, a steady diminution in the proportionate ratio of the superior racial stocks from which leaders arise, and the gradual deterioration of their general quality and ability, is about as mathematically certain a prediction as could be made of future racial conditions.

The sole means of forestalling such a racial misfortune is by the increase of offspring in this superior racial stock, or positive eugenics.

We know from reliable factual data that the best quality of leaders rises, and rises in the greatest frequency, from the progeny of the clergy. Knowing these facts, it should not be difficult for us to see that any aid given to such a project would go to secure greater and more enduring human benefits than any other effort we could support.

This is a project which should strongly appeal to every individual who is racially minded. And it would seem particularly fitting that it should receive the ardent support of the sons and other descendants of the clergy.

CHURCH MUST KEEP STEP

By H. AUGUSTINE SMITH, Boston University.

Religion in a machine age must keep abreast of progress. As man has grown wings and soared to the sky in airplanes—so religion has outgrown its tendencies of yesterday.

Hymns which delighted the congregations of our fathers and mothers today lull us to sleep. A new era of hymnals is coming. The hymn of tomorrow will deal with aviation, the transmission of power, the creation of new, unknown wells of energy.

The early Crusaders went into the Orient to discover great wealth. They brought back from their oriental excursions tapestries, perfumes and ideas of grandeur. These they incorporated into that period, which became known as the Renaissance, and art took its place in religion.

Today, youth is upon a second crusade. A crusade in quest of youth, drama, beauty. The tingling things in life! It is thus that the church will keep step with the machine age and progress.

Yesterday the Crusader went to the Far East and songs of adventure were sung of him. Today, the Crusader goes up in his plane. We should have hymns dedicated to Commander Byrd and Colonel Lindbergh.

JUSTICE FOR JEW DEMANDED

By RABBI STEPHEN S. WISE, New York.

The "silent pogroms" are the feeling of anti-Judaism. They have resulted in the barring of Jews from certain banks, clubs and industries by overzealous Christians. The Jew who believes it a splendid thing to damn his own people and voice the feelings of his own race's persecutors deserves the strongest condemnation.

Missionaries working in Jewish fields are to be decried, for we do not sit in darkness—at least we do not think we do. If I were a Christian I should feel ashamed of the reaction of so much of the so-called Christian world to the anti-Jewish deeds wrought in Palestine a few months ago, even though this reaction be abetted or half-justified by the self-betrayal of a few outstanding Jews. The truth is that Christianity for the largest part has given its sympathy and good will to those who have warred against the Jews in Palestine rather than to the Jews who have been warred upon.

A terrible anti-Jewish ill will has been revealed by individual groups and journals, which have borne themselves as if Jews were ruthless invaders and despoilers of Palestine and slayers of its people.

PATRIOTS MUST LOOK FORWARD

By REV. HENRY DARLINGTON (Episcopal), New York.

Unless they look forward, instead of backward, patriotic societies may prove to be one of the most pernicious evils a forward looking America may have to contend with. The permanent future of our country today depends upon what you and I do in the generation in which we live, more than upon what was done by our ancestors from which we are benefiting at the present time.

If you have a vision of the future and are willing to act as your progenitors would have acted had they been alive today, you can do untold good. But if your eyes are set on the past and your thoughts dwell only upon what has been done, patriotic societies may then prove to be one of the most pernicious evils that a forward looking America may have to contend with. The times are charged with infinite possibilities for those who have the courage and vision.

The farewell address of Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, the South African statesman, convinced me that the great opportunity for this young country is to lead in a new era into paths of peace, and that it is the youth of the country who should assume leadership and, seeing the vision, carry on the torch.

FEW ABLE TO HANDLE MONEY

By DR. S. S. HUERNER, University of Pennsylvania.

Ninety eight people out of every hundred are "financially incompetent." Man has two great economic disabilities. One is his inability to continue his life; the other his inability to continue his substance.

Only one out of ten men at sixty-five has enough money to assure him an income of even $50 a month.

Only one out of three men who are healthy at thirty dies before he reaches sixty. The burden of support of the others usually falls on the children. This is terrible philosophy. Each generation should take care of itself.

WHAT sells a new car? The impression it makes when demonstrated. That's why more dealers in New York and New England demonstrate their cars with Socony Special plus Ethyl than with any other motor fuel.

Your car, too, will always give "demonstration performance" if you use Socony Special plus Ethyl—the only premium gasoline sold in New York and New England to which Ethyl is added.

For years Socony Special was recognized as the best premium gasoline in its territory. Now the addition of Ethyl makes it the finest motor fuel that science has yet developed—explains why sales keep jumping month by month.

FRANCE PLACES HERRICK ON PAR WITH FRANKLIN

American Ambassador's Life Work Wins Highest Praise of Parisians.

Paris.—Four spontaneous movements among French and Americans to honor the memory of the late Ambassador Myron T. Herrick of Cleveland will make the Ohlson diplomat rank with Benjamin Franklin as the most honored diplomat the United States has ever sent to France.

The first honor was the decision of the city of Paris to name one of its most beautiful avenues Myron Herrick, the only American ambassador or minister, with the exception of Franklin, who has been so honored. There are streets for Presidents Wilson, Washington and Lincoln.

Start Monument Fund.

The American and French admirers of Ambassador Herrick have started a fund for the erection of a statue near or at the beginning of the new Avenue Myron Herrick. Again Benjamin Franklin is the only other American diplomat who has a statue in Paris.

Ambassador Herrick's friends in Cleveland subscribed $10,000 for the equipment of an American Legion building which is only a stone's throw from the embassy where Herrick died.

Herrick's untiring work in founding and inaugurating the American hospital in Paris commemorated by a hospital ward, which, although it was intended to honor the memory of Mrs. Herrick who worked herself to death nursing soldiers in the hospital during the war, is at a monument to the generosity of the people.

Without naming Benjamin Franklin and Myron T. Herrick were the most honored American ambassadors who ever served in France.

U. S. Great Medical Board for Air Pilots

Washington, D. C.—International diseases and physical requirements of aviation have prompted the War department to develop a special aviation medicine division of the medical corps to keep army pilots in proper condition.

Among the occupational disabilities recognized by constant flying are: stammering, impaired hearing and a condition caused by constant high altitude in which the body gradually becomes dehydrated in oxygen.

A school of aviation medicine has been established at Brooks field, San Antonio, Texas, through which 60 flight surgeons already have passed. These medical officers attached to flying units must be constantly and severely required to fly constantly and severely.

By regular contact with flyers' disabilities they become able to diagnose symptoms of conditions which would not be cause for alarm except to flyers.

The importance of physical fitness lies in the fact that the human element alone has retarded efforts to make flying safer. War department statistics show that 69 per cent of commercial flying accidents, 61 per cent of army accidents, and 74 per cent of navy flying accidents are due to pilot failures rather than mechanical defects.

THE HOME OF JOHN HOWARD PAYNE

In this weatherbeaten farm house at East Hampton, L. I., John Howard Payne wrote "Home, Sweet Home," one of the world's most famous songs. The house passed into the possession of a man named Buck, now dead, but his will makes no special provision for the structure, consequently it may soon go on the real estate market.

City Grew as Visioned, but in Wrong Direction

In the early days of San Francisco, when it was a town of but 2,000 inhabitants, Richard Plindell Hammond, father of John Hays Hammond, the eminent mining engineer and capitalist, lived there. In fact, John Hays Hammond was born in the Golden Gate city in 1853. The elder Hammond, himself a surveyor, looked over the magnificent San Francisco bay and foresaw that a great city would rise on its shores. He was a surveyor's eye how the land lay. He visioned a great port of the future, mistress of the Pacific coast. So he proceeded to acquire certain holdings of land where he was certain the future city would stand. He surveyed it himself, laying out streets and demarking town lots. It was only a matter of waiting a few years. There in the harbor lay tall ships which had brought out gold-seekers and some which came from strange ports to trade. The day was not far distant when ships from all the world would lie in that harbor, thought Hammond.

Today, three-quarters of a century afterward, that carefully surveyed townsite is a mud flat, still vacant, save for an occasional shack of a fisherman. San Francisco has grown into the proud city Hammond foresaw, but on almost every bit of ground save that he selected as the inevitable site.

Tipling and Riots Put End to Morris Dancing

The Lancashire morris dancers who played up so well for their county in the folk-dancing festival in London would perform under social conditions vastly different from those of a century ago, for what really led to the decay of Lancashire morris dancing was the injudicious "treating" at each stopping place of the rushcart dancers, the brawls between rival teams and their supporters, and the riotous crowds assembled by the peasant, says a columnist in the Manchester Guardian.

"As drunk as a morris dancer," was a Lancashire saying. Alex Wilson's picture (1831) of a rushcart and morris dancers in Long Millgate, Manchester, in the midst of a riotous and rascally crowd, explains well enough why the custom was put down, the picture being given extra verisimilitude by the local portraits introduced, including the celebrated Rev. Brooks, bewigged and with stick raised characteristically in wrath.

of ten. Further search revealed sugar and coffee. He could live for a week on what he found and never venture outside the door. During the day he must be careful not to be seen. But at night New York was his own. Those who had known the door, suspicious, fishermen would not have recognized in the alert housebreaker the same man.

Jonathan Gibbs was gone, dead and buried. And this, too, in a sense he did not know. Other fishermen had found his waterlogged rowboat. And when he was not seen in his familiar haunts and had not called at the village store to exchange his eggs for groceries, a search was made. His home was found unoccupied, his chickens famished. Plainly, Jonathan Gibbs had been drowned and his body swirled out to sea in the undertow.

At first the New York Gibbs ventured out only at night within a short radius of his sanctuary. There had been no mail. There had been no prying janitor. He had almost four hundred dollars and almost four months' rent paid. He felt assured that Bettington was dead.

It was on the third evening of his occupancy that this calm and pleasant optimism was swept away. He had gone to the subway entrance to buy an evening paper. As he stood on the steps before the front door feeling for his latchkey, he was conscious that a policeman across the street by the armory was looking at him.

Although it was dark he felt stricken with the certainty that the officer looked at him alone.

From the front windows of his unlighted rooms he had an unobstructed view. The officer was now speaking to a smaller man, who seemed to be pointing directly at the windows through which Jonathan Gibbs gazed. The coincidence was food for somber thought. As though concealing some plot aimed at Gibbs, the two slowly crossed the street. Then his bell rang three times. Gibbs opened the door to the landing silently and listened. He heard the front door open and steps advance along the flagged passage. Then he heard the footsteps begin the ascent.

Softly he locked the door and stood a few feet back from it. To the knock he returned no answer. He looked about him wildly. "Trapped!" he groaned. "After all these years to be caught!"

Fear roused him from inaction. Before long they would burst in the door. The fire escape at the rear was his sole hope. It was pitch dark, but he dared risk no light or make the descent slowly. He had gone but half a flight when he trod upon a flower pot placed there in violation of all the city's fire ordinances. He clutched about him wildly and found only a piece of rotting rope. For a moment it promised to stay his fall; then he felt the old strands giving.

The paved yard to which he crashed was fifty feet below. They had not been wrong in Blackport who assumed that the man they called Jonathan Gibbs was dead.

CHAPTER IV

An Amazing Adventure

During the long hours Bettington spent a prisoner, he thought over, and reflected as impractical, several schemes for escape. When all was said and done, escape from his cabin to the larger prison of the ship at sea offered little betterment of his condition. He pondered over Sam's command that he should be quiet. This presupposed that there was some person, or group of persons, unaware of his detention. But whether a declaration of his presence would bring liberty was another matter.

The hours passed slowly. It was dusk when they dropped anchor at the foot of East Twenty-fourth street.

When Sam came in with his evening meal there was a safety razor on the table.

"Got to spruce up," said Sam. "Owner's coming aboard tomorrow morning. The boss says for you to look like ready money."

Bettington looked at Sam and wondered what made him so serene and happy. It was a face on which had been graven the marks of violent emotions. He was no more than five feet eight inches in height, but his chest was fully forty-five inches in girth. A life of ease had turned some of his once steel muscles to fat, but he was still enormously strong. A fat and bulbous nose, driven into his face by some tremendous impact, conspired to make him repulsive. Essentially he was of the sea. There was the sailor's roll in his walk. A dangerous man in a physical combat, Bettington decided, intellectually he was below the normal. He was cleanly shaved and the shirt he wore was new.

"Wondering what I'm all dolled up for?" he demanded. "I'll tell you. We're going to have skirts aboard this trip. Metzger told me. There's a lady's maid, a secretary and the owner's wife. Metzger's seen her pictures in the paper. He's crazy over her."

"Who's Metzger?"

"The chief engineer. Lucky for him he don't like 'em as young as I do. Me," said Sam slyly, rolling his red eyes. "I'm all for the chickens. This secretary is some skirt from what I hear."

Bettington was incensed at the bestial glee of the recumbent man.

"Do you suppose," he said, looking at Sam with a disfavor that could be felt even by the sailor, "that any lady, secretary to the owner of this boat, would have anything to do with you? How will you have the chance to speak to the owner's guests? Don't be foolish, Sam."

Sam looked at him a long time in silence.

"I can see what you're driving at," said the sailor. "You want to find out what sort of a trip this is going to be. Well, you don't get nothing out of me." He laughed long and loud at what seemed to him his masterly discovery of the other's motives. Then he described his way of life and love. There was something nauseating in it. And there was something frightening, too. How did Sam, who berthed and messed with the crew, come to imagine, without good grounds, that he would have the opportunity to come intimately into contact with the owner's guests?

There was another disquieting thought. Suppose that he was kept a prisoner here until the boat put out to sea again and so forced to be a party to indescribable scenes! Escape was impossible. It was a steel built boat; the porthole was a small one and his only weapon a safety razor blade.

He was thinking bitterly at noon on Monday, when, from his porthole, he saw a launch approaching the ship. He recognized it as the one which had taken him from Blackport to Bar Harbor. Beside the crew there were two men and two women. He had no time to take in their features because he was amazed to see that one of the men was none other than Tubby Unwin. The launch had passed his field of vision before he could recover from his surprise. With the aid of the mirror that Sam had brought with the shaving outfit Bettington could see that the launch was brought alongside. And from it, Unwin and the three strangers climbed aboard.

In vain Bettington shouted and kicked at the door. Steam was up, and the various noises and activities on deck made his outcry inaudible. Looking through his mirror he saw, presently, that Unwin descended the steps into the boat. Apparently he was not going. He was waving to some one on deck.

Unwin even threw kisses at the unknown. It seemed to Bettington that Unwin must hear his shouts before he drew away from the vessel. The launch was only a few yards distant at one time, before she put about and made for the shore. On the landing stage of the yacht club Unwin stood still waving. And so he stood until the ocean-going steam houseboat had turned her bow to the south.

Unwin went back to his wife very happy.

"It will be wonderful for both of them," he said. "Mr. Hadway was very pleasant, for a man in his position to one in mine. But she is a rarer and finer type. I am sure she is unhappy. She seemed to cling to our Mary. Bob doesn't know yet how he will like the men. He has the impression that his presence is resented, but, of course, that's all nonsense."

But Bob made no mistake in estimating the warmth of his reception. The forecastle resented him. "He's a spy," said Hammer.

"He's the girl's brother," volunteered a man from the engine room. "I heard Metzger tell Leary so."

"My girl's brother, is he?" Sam commented. "If she's nice to me, I'll be good to him." He beckoned Bob to him. Bob, anxious to do his best and make a good impression, came running up.

"Boy," said Sam, "what's your sister's name?"

Bob looked into Sam's eyes and his tongue withheld the answer that had been ready. Utterly he understood that the lecherous look and the question itself from such a source was an insult. He would show this broad, heavy, impudent sailor where he stood.

"My sister's name is Miss Unwin," Hammer uttered; he hated women and dimly foresaw in Sam's weakness some future trouble. But he did not utter when Sam slowly turned his head and looked at him. None better than Hammer knew for what reasons Sam never went ashore when he could avoid it.

It was this creeping fear on the evil face of Hammer that warned the boys and he saw that none of the other men dared take his part. Bob saw that Sam's face became emerald. He was in the grip of fear. He realized that never, until now, had he known the sensation of physical terror.

Interested. He had seen a cheery young man in uniform, who had been pointed out as the wireless operator. But between the two was a great gulf fixed. "Sparks" was an officer. Perhaps Bob had entered upon his new task with too great an enthusiasm. He found himself called upon to do certain greasy and oily offices usually performed by engine room help. Metzger, the chief engineer, swore at him violently when he began to ask questions about the engines. On the whole, he found himself, for the first time in his life, distinctly unpopular.

Barnegut light was in sight when Sam, at midnight, came into Bettington's cabin.

"The Boss says you can see him now," he grinned.

Bettington followed him along a dim passage to the extreme stern of the vessel. Here he unlocked a door leading to a companion way which brought him to a quarter deck at the after part of the yacht. There were two big wicker chairs and a table. Sam motioned him to sit down. Then he knocked at a stateroom door and was hidden to enter.

"You're to go in," Sam said a few moments later. "I'll wait here."

It was not surprising that a certain emotion of excitement and, perhaps, apprehension seized upon the painter as he moved toward the door. What manner of ruffian was he to confront? And what was it that he had been predestined for? A man who could hold a turbulent and ferocious brute like Sam in thrall, would probably be one of greater power and violence than he.

Never, Bettington confessed, as he entered the stateroom, had his judgments been more at fault. This was no towering bully, no disciple of the strong-arm school of underworld aristocracy who looked at him. Apparently the man was of the same social class as himself.

The Boss was a little, slender man of delicate feature and limb. His face had that ivory pallor one associates with extreme old age. And yet, he did not seem to be an old man. He was smiling as Bettington entered; he smiled while he talked.

"I am afraid," said the Boss, after waving his guest to a seat, "that you have not enjoyed your voyage."

"I have not," Bettington returned. "I may tell you at once, that I resent the whole occurrence. It has been one outrage added to another. That they had their origin in a mistake I know very well, but the effect is just the same and I demand to be put ashore at once."

"We are provisioned for a year," said the Boss calmly, "and most likely shall not touch any port for one month."

"I shall," snapped the painter. "I think not," the other corrected gently. "I expected you to make these protests. Sam has told me of your attitude and I admire it. The wise man differs from a fool in knowing just when to try to make terms. We are here to talk business."

"Look here," Bettington began, "explained to your first murderer out there, that there had been some mistake of identities. My name is Bettington; I am a painter of seascapes and my studio is on East Thirty-fourth street."

The Boss took from a small table a New York paper. "Did you have a pleasant meal?" he asked slyly. He passed the paper over the table and pointed out an obituary notice tucked away in an obscure spot. "Read it," the Boss commanded. To be continued.

Surprise Party

Mr. A. J. Blake was tendered a surprise party last Saturday night at the Town Hall in honor of his seventy-fifth birthday. The party was planned so that he had no inkling of the affair until he arrived at the hall and found over a hundred friends and neighbors were waiting to greet him. He was presented with a large sum of money as a gift from his friends. There were two beautiful birthday cakes made by Mrs. Ada Cole and Mrs. Ruth Proof.

At 10:30 all retired to the dining room which was prettily decorated and refreshments of ice cream and assorted cakes were served. The evening was delightfully spent with music and dancing and a good time was enjoyed. All departed at a late hour wishing Mr. Blake many more happy birthdays. Following is a poem written by Mrs. Addie K. Mason of Bethel for this occasion and read by Charles Cole during the evening:

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS
To A. J. Blake, May 10, 1930
Just a band of friends and neighbors
Come to greet you here tonight;
Friendly faces all about you
Hope to make your birth night bright.

Many years you've lived among us
Helped all in kindly way;
We'll try to make you happy
On your seventy-fifth birthday.

Hard has seemed the road at times, sir,
Yet you've trod it firm and true;
Doing well each task before you,
Getting each and all their due.

As a teamster staunch and steady
You have given us your best;
And no matter what the problem,
You have always stood the test.

And with all our hearts we're wishing
For you many a glad birthday;
And as life's trail goes winding,
We'll keep step with you all way.

Resolutions of Respect
Whereas, our Heavenly Father has permitted the Messenger of death to enter our midst and remove from us our beloved sister, Grace J. Merrill, who faithfully served as Chaplain of the order.

Resolved that the Sons of Union Veterans Auxiliary extend their heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family in this dark hour of affliction.

Resolved that a copy of these Resolutions be sent to the family of our departed sister, that they be spread upon our records, a copy sent to the Oxford County Citizen for publication, and that our Charter be draped for thirty days.

Passed out of the shadow into eternal day—
Why do they call it dying,
This sweet going away?

As a child perhaps you awakened to find yourself in the dark, and were afraid; but as soon as you heard mother's voice all your fears vanished. You were not alone. Have there come to you dark days in your later life, days when you could hear no voice that gave you courage? It is upon such occasions that Christ would come to you, saying as He did of old, "I am, I, be not afraid."

Next Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock the people of Bethel and surrounding country are to have the rare privilege of hearing Henry F.
